

Handling Objections and Rebuttals

Customers may raise objections during outbound insurance calls. These should be handled calmly and professionally.

Common objections include lack of time, cost concerns, and prior coverage.

Agents should acknowledge the objection, provide a concise response, and confirm whether the customer wishes to proceed.

Never argue with the customer or apply pressure tactics.

If the customer declines, thank them for their time and close the call politely.